As an instructor, shall I check some students' work or all students' work?

In cases where a faculty member wants to submit only one student's work to a plagiarism prevention tool, we would like to suggest that they consider that this is, in a certain way, a selection bias based on their suspicion about an individual student. It would be advised to submit all students' responses to a plagiarism prevention tool for a given assignment in order to ensure that no individual student is held to a stricter standard than the others.
